RUNNING FOR WHAT MATTERS

It was impossible not to shed a tear at my friend Ira's status up-date. Posted in 2022 only days after she'd left her home in Kyiv, the besieged capital of Ukraine, she shared a past image of herself lifting her country's flag after completing a running event. She wrote, "We are all running to the best of our abilities a marathon called life. Let's run it these days even better than that. With something that never dies in our hearts." In the following days, I saw the many ways my friend continued to run that race, as she kept us updated on how to pray for and support those suffering in her country.

Ira's words brought new depth to the call in Hebrews 12 for believers to "run with perseverance" (v.1). That call follows chapter 11's moving account of the heroes of faith, the "great cloud of witnesses" (12:1) who'd lived with courageous, persistent faith- even at risk to their lives (11:33-38).

Even though they "only saw... and welcomed [God's promises] from a distance" (V.13), they were living for something eternal, for something that never dies.

All believers in Jesus are called to live that same way. Because the shalom- the flourishing and peace – of God's kingdom is worth giving our all for. And because it's Christ's example and power that sustains us (12: 2-3)

Dear God, words fail us when we see Your people's faith and courage in heart breaking circumstances. Give us the courage to follow You like that.
